Background

- Native of Ponca City
- BS in Chemical Engineering from OSU
- MBA with emphasis in International Business from OSU
- Work in private industry, including chemical manufacturing, utilities, and telecommunications
- Adjunct Professor with Tulsa Community College
- Community volunteer

Christine Allison grew up in Ponca City and graduated with a BS in Chemical Engineering from Oklahoma State University in 1992. She earned her Professional Engineering license in 1998, and graduated with an MBA specializing in International Business from OSU in 2002.

She has worked in various chemical manufacturing plants as a process engineer and has done process plant design for a manufacturing company. She also has worked in the telecommunications and electric utility industries, as well as teaching at Tulsa Community College on an adjunct basis and operating a local print shop.

She is involved with two “Lean Forum” groups in the Tulsa metro area, where Lean implementers/champions from local manufacturing companies get together to share best practices about continuous improvement programs. She works with local workforce agencies, economic development groups, and manufacturing companies on the “Dream It, Do It” program, a marketing program that encourages people to enter the manufacturing workforce and educates students, parents, and educators about the benefits of careers in manufacturing. Christine also serves on the Oklahoma Career Pathways Manufacturing Subcommittee.

Christine has previously served on the board of the Southeast Tulsa Jaycees and the Tulsa Area Manufacturers Association, and is currently serving on the Oklahoma Recycling Association board and is a volunteer for Reading Partners. She also is working on a Graduate Certificate in Data Mining from OSU.

She has been a Manufacturing Extension Agent with the Oklahoma Manufacturing Alliance for more than seven years, and serves Tulsa, Okmulgee, Washington, and parts of Osage and Rogers counties. She lives in Tulsa with her husband, Shannon, and son, Cameron.
